There were only about a score of persons, including three women, in the building when it was raided by detectives of the bomb squad, under the command of Sergt. James Gegan and agents of the Department of Justice. They went to the place to arrest four men for whom they held Federal warrants, but did not find the men there.

of the building disclosed a small, dark room in which the entrances to a closet was shut off by a row of shelving. The shelving was removed and behind this was found the bottie containing the dangerous liquids.

Some of the bottles and phials were labelled. The markings showed they contained TNT, glycerine sulphate, nitrio seid, muristic seld, charcoul and ammonia hydrate, all of which of various types. Some of the botties had no labels and their contents will not be determined until analysis by the Bureau of Mines experts.
